Moving from Ally to Accomplice

Key Takeaways

How Far Are You Willing to Go to Disrupt Racism in the Workplace?

- Employees of color often feel socially isolated at work
- Being an accomplice means more than simply listening, you must be willing to take action!
- To be an effective accomplice you must be willing to risk your privilege to effect change.

Tai Harden-Moore, JD, MBA
Founder, Moore Consultants, LLC

JD, Florida A&M University

MBA, Concordia University – Portland

Tai Harden-Moore, Founder and CEO of Moore Consultants, LLC, is a dedicated diversity, equity, belonging, and inclusion advocate.

While earning her Juris Doctor degree from Florida A&M University College of Law, Tai served as the Lieutenant Governor for Non-Traditional Students for the American Bar Association Law Student Division, which afforded her the opportunity to work with and be an advocate for underserved student populations, particularly, students of color, women, LGBTQ students, and part-time law students in Florida, Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, Tennessee and Puerto Rico.

Since graduating from law school, Tai has demonstrated her commitment to diversity, equity, belonging, and inclusion, social and economic justice and, racial equity, by being involved in and giving back to the community in various ways. Whether it be through her work as an equity trainer and facilitator, her service to local non-profit boards, her research concerning legal issues surrounding gentrification and displacement in North and Northeast Portland, her work as a Conversation Leader for Oregon Humanities, or using her voice to bring attention to social justice issues through articles published by Diverse Issues in Higher Education, Medium, Huffington Post, and The Skanner News, Tai has chosen to use her voice to effect change in our community.
